c. 1935-1947

Originally a part of a tract called "Scotland," Lot #8 at Scotland Beach was created by local land developer Thomas A. Ridgell and his wife Mary. The subdivision he platted in October of 1932 was to supplement the already extensive array of cottages that fronted the Chesapeake Bay and the Scotland Beach Hotel. The resulting subdivision included thirty two, 9000 sq. ft. lots laid out on a grid plan. In 1935 the Ridgell's sold Lot #8 to Charles A. and Lillian R. Barr of Branchville, Maryland. Either the Barrs or the Cocimano family (the subsequent owners) erected a modest one story, frame dwelling with a wrap around porch. Local resident Audrey Pratt remembers staying with family and friends in the Scotland Beach neighborhood and recalls sleeping out on the porch during the warmer days of summer so as to take advantage of passing breezes. The dwelling currently on Lot #8 typified the modest cottages that were built in Scotland Beach in the 1930s and 1940s to accommodate summer visitors as well as year round residents. Both the dwelling and surrounding development document the importance recreation played in the development of this small waterside community.

Scotland Beach was initially conceived by the Ridgells in the 1910s, for it was in 1911 that they built the Scotland Beach Hotel. Their subsequent success was documented in the St. Mary's Beacon as well as in the establishment of a post office there in 1924.¹ The hotel prospered until 1933 when a tidal wave rose and severely damaged the building and many of the cottages around it.² The hotel never quite recovered as postal service was discontinued in 1943. eroding shoreline since the early twentieth century has erased any evidence of the hotel's existence, for Regina Hammett notes that a concrete culvert about 100 feet from the present shoreline marks the location of an early twentieth century road that ran to the hotel and cottages.³ As a result of this erosion Lot #8 has almost become a waterfront property.

Lot #8 Scotland Beach is located at the southwest corner of the intersection of Scotland Beach Road and Bay Front Drive near the rural community of Scotland, Maryland. The cottage is oriented on an east/west axis and is situated near several other small dwellings with similar setbacks from the road. This layout resulted from the community's regimented grid plan that still can be seen today. Due to significant erosion, the house currently has an unobstructed view of the Chesapeake Bay. The house is abandoned and has suffered fire damage.

The cottage, itself, is a one story, frame dwelling that is currently ringed by a glazed-in porch. The dwelling is raised up on a cinder block and concrete block foundation. The circular sawn frame is sheathed with thin board siding as well as clapboard fastened with wire nails. The roof rafters are left exposed on the exterior and the double-pitch, gable roof is overlaid with asphalt shingles.

The primary or east elevation consists of a glazed porch which is pierced by a series of three six-over-six windows, a door, and two pairs of two, one-over-one windows. The north elevation is pierced by a series of three pairs of six-over-six windows and triple set of similar sash. Both the north and east side The rear or west elevation features a centrally located door, three sliding windows, and a six pane fixed sash window. The south elevation has two sliding windows and paired set of six-over-six windows which has been removed. This side was extensively damaged during the fire and much of it is covered by plywood.

The interior was not investigated.
